WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1869.

THE ELECTION.

As we predicted some days ago, the force of what seems to be a general law of American politics, and the prevailing desire to sustain the zealous efforts of the national administration to reduce the public debt and insure an honest management of the national revenues, have insured Republican victories in Pennsylvania and Ohio. The Registry law, too, has proved wonderfully efficacious in checking Democratic efforts to carry Philadelphia by fraud, and the Republican party can once more congratulate itself upon a city, State, and general triumph.

The details of the contest are not yet fully known, but the returns already received abundantly justify the condemnations of unpopular nominations which have, from time to time, appeared in these columns. It is the duty of partisan conventions to select nominees who are not only competent and trustworthy, but well calculated to rally the full strength of their party, and, if possible, something more. In this State such action is specially important, as it has repeatedly been carried in important elections by less than one thousand majority. Harrison obtained in 1840 but a few hundred majority over Van Buren; Johnson was elected Governor in 1848 over Longstreth by a few hundred majority; and Sharswood was elected as Judge in 1857 by less than one thousand majority.

In view of these records of former contests, the returns show that Geary's nomination was an extremely hazardous measure, and that it fearfully and unnecessarily jeopardized the Republican triumph which, under other circumstances, would never have been for an instant doubtful. In spite of the fact that the dissatisfaction with his administration was subordinated to the desire to sustain General Grant, his vote falls far behind that polled for his colleague on the State ticket. In this city, where his Republican antagonists rallied at the last moment, cordially, for his support, his majority is five hundred less than that given to Judge Williams—a discrepancy sufficient in itself, in a close election, to turn the scale; and a special despatch to the Press, from Pittsburg, states that while his majority in Allegheny county will not exceed forty-five hundred, Judge Williams will receive more than seven thousand, which is a loss of twenty-five hundred. But few of the first reports from other portions of the State refer to the difference between the vote for Geary and Williams, but a telegram from Huntingdon states that in that borough the majority given for Williams is fourteen more than that obtained by Geary, and there can be little doubt that in the entire Commonwealth he falls several thousand votes behind his colleague. It is a discouraging fact, too, that in nearly every county in the State, outside of Philadelphia, the vote of Geary falls far behind that polled for Hartranft in 1868. A dreary succession of Republican losses is reported, and the preliminary returns indicate that Geary's whole majority in the State will not exceed the Republican gain effected in Philadelphia alone, over the vote in October, 1868. We may well exclaim with the ancient general, "One more such victory, and we are undone."

Since Grant's majority of 28,898 in 1868 is cut down to 4000 or 5000, the managing politicians cannot be too deeply impressed with the necessity of popular nominations hereafter. In the city the same lesson is taught by the vote for Houseman, whose majority is one thousand less than the average majority for his colleagues. In a close contest, such as Philadelphia has repeatedly witnessed, he would have been defeated despite the triumph of his associate nominees. Although not personally objectionable, the voters have made an earnest protest against the agencies by which his nomination was procured. The obnoxious renominated candidates for the Legislature have been elected, despite the fact that they failed to secure the support of many honest and conscientious members of the Republican party. The Registry law and the overruling desire to sustain the national administration have saved them from the fate they so well merited. But if they are not wholly lost to all sense of honor and rectitude, we trust that instead of abusing their legislative privileges in 1870 as they did in 1869, they will strive to redeem their characters, and to earnestly and honestly serve their constituents.

THE CONTESTED ELECTION CASES. The election returns yesterday will furnish a useful guide to the Judges who still have under consideration the contested election cases which involve a final decision upon the results of the local contest in Philadelphia in October, 1868. Independent of the direct proof of innumerable frauds perpetrated by the Democracy last year, they have a tangible evidence that this is essentially a Republican city, and that even when loaded down with unpopular nominees, pitted against the strongest and best men the Democracy could put in the field, the Republicans have a working majority of several thousands of the bona fide voters. The Democratic frauds of 1868 are therefore doubly proven—by the result under a law which was unusually efficacious in preventing new rascalities as well as by unimpeachable legal testimony.

OUR REPUBLICANISM. In the outcry against political corruption and official incompetency were directed only against the adherents of one particular partisan organization by the bitterest and most uncompromising of their opponents, the masses of the people could well afford to close their ears against it. Ever since politics first became a trade, the staple wares of the professionals have consisted mainly of unattested abuse of their opponents, on the ground of dishonesty and imbecility, and as long as politics remains a trade we may not look for a change. But the people who are called upon to support the regular tickets of both parties, and upon whom must fall the penalties of misgovernment and the burdens of corruption, have at last been made to comprehend the fact that the professional politicians, as a class, and without distinction of party, are incompetent and corrupt; and that, as a general rule, it matters but little as to which party is nominally in the ascendant, as far as the details of governmental administration and national, State, and municipal legislation are concerned. The profession of politics, never remarkable for the competency and integrity of the men who have crowded themselves into it as the easiest way of earning a livelihood, has been rapidly degenerating in this country since the days of General Jackson, and we can now cordially and reasonably unite with Charles Dickens in expressing an infinitesimal amount of faith in the men who govern us, while we still repose illimitable faith in the governed. It is questionable, however, if even our faith in the people governed should be without bounds, when they so quietly and tamely submit to misrepresentation and misgovernment, and year after year suffer the men who have plundered and cheated them to obtain ostensible indorsement and a fresh lease of power through the agency of the ballot-box.

For the lamentable and disgraceful state of affairs at present existing, we hold that the political press is directly and in the main responsible. If a newspaper permits a man who is notoriously incompetent and corrupt to stand for office without protest and exposure, simply because he professes to adhere to the principles of national policy which it supports, that newspaper becomes a participant in all his official rascality, and especially in this case when it not only acquiesces in his nomination, but gives him direct support by becoming an apologist for his rascality. On no other basis can the immeasurable influence of the press be judged. There are tens of thousands of honest and good-intentioned voters who swear by this journal or by that journal, who accept their notions of men and things second-handed from the press, who have unlimited confidence in its honesty and impartiality, and who will meekly follow in its lead, in the firm conviction that they are doing their full duty to themselves and to the country by so doing. And when the journals which are recognized as being, or which claim to be, the organs of any particular party in a certain locality, unite in ignoring or defending the shortcomings and transgressions of an incompetent or corrupt politician who has succeeded in smuggling himself through a nominating convention, the evil of which we complain is augmented a hundred fold, and nothing except a general revolution in the sentiments of the people on national issues will ensure his defeat.

But the press is frequently impressed into the service and made the servile tool of designing and unscrupulous men, by reason of its treatment of candidates for office being judged by the false and mischievous standard of political consistency and party devotion. If the voice of a conscientious journal, on the eve of an election, is raised against a candidate for office who stands upon the same platform of principles, it at once arouses the wrath of the professional politicians, is denounced by them as faithless to its creed, and accused of having gone over to the enemy. If the people would ignore the verdict of the professionals in this matter, and turn a deaf ear to their assaults upon the independent press, all would be well. But the people are not yet emancipated from the sway of demagogues, and a sound and zealous Republican or Democrat who honestly desires to see his party set free from the individual corruption of its self-elected leaders, is frequently alarmed at the cry of wolf, come from what quarter it may. His devotion to principle is so intensified, that he cannot see anything in a political contest save principle, and when principle is at stake regards a mere question of personal fitness or individual honesty as altogether too trivial for consideration by its side. The unscrupulous demagogues who live upon the public plunder understand this sentiment full well, and are by no means backward about taking advantage of it. Conscious that they are unable to refute the charges of corruption and imbecility which are preferred against them, they make no attempt at denial, present no facts in explanation or extenuation, and simply give the alarm of "a wolf in sheep's clothing," "a piratical craft, sailing under false colors," and other clap-trap of this sort, making the hue and cry as loud and as long-continued as they can, and scrambling into office before the ears of the people are relieved of the din and their eyes opened to the sober truth of the matter.

It has been, and it still is, the determined and conscientious purpose of THE EVENING TELEGRAPH to warn the masses of the Republican party of the utter incompetency and thorough dishonesty of these men; and we will not in the future, any further than we have in the past, be deterred from pursuing the plain path of duty by such false issues. Our devotion to the principles of the great Republican party—the party which saved the Union from slavery by the election of Abraham Lincoln, the party which rescued the Union from disruption by a vigorous prosecution of the war, the party which prevented the victory on the field of battle from going for naught by the election of General Grant to the Presidency—is too strong and too deeply rooted to permit us to prove recreant to our past proessions. The hold of the Republican party upon the governments of the State of Pennsylvania and of the city of Philadelphia has been brought into imminent peril, through the incompetency and dishonesty of men who have had enough money and art to push themselves into office under its banner. They have disgraced themselves, the offices they have held, and the people by whom they were elected; they have brought the Republican party of the State and city into just disrepute with the people at large; they have sought office and held office without regard for the rights of the people or the welfare of the party; and when they presented themselves to their constituents for re-election, it became not only our privilege but our duty to speak in plain, unvarnished terms of their claims and qualifications. If the Republican ticket had been defeated yesterday, these men would have been solely responsible for the defeat. To save the Republican party from such a calamity was our purpose, the main-spring and the secret source of our past and present course.

THE CITY EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.—The collection and collating of the multitudinous returns of an election like that of yesterday in our city, where over a hundred thousand ballots were deposited on account of several dozen different candidates, are by no means an easy task. This year, however, under the able management of John L. Hill, Esq., President of the City Executive Committee, the uniform precision, accuracy, and quickness with which this desired object was achieved were most striking. Within one hour after the closing of the polls last evening, complete and exact returns from every section of the city were received at the rooms of the National Union Club; and as fast as received they were compared with the figures of previous elections and tabulated for use. The competency and skill thus shown by Mr. Hill in his first year's service as President show he was peculiarly "the right man in the right place."
